UNITED METHODIST CHURCH
MISSION BIOGRAPHICAL SERIES

BISHOPS – MISSIONARIES

ID# 183
PALMER, BISHOP EVERETT W.
Bishop Palmer dies

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (UMN)—Bishop Everett W. Palmer, resident leader of the United Methodist Church's Portland (Ore.) Area, died while on vacation here January 6 after suffering a heart attack. He was 64.

A native of Wisconsin, he was a hard-rock gold miner and contractor in the Black Hills of South Dakota when he was married to Miss Florence Wales of Dallas, S.D., and through her encouragement, and a football scholarship, he entered Dakota Wesleyan College to become an athletic coach. A month after entering college, he decided to enter the ministry and was named student pastor of a church described as “19 years dying and one year dead.”

After finishing at Dakota Wesleyan, Bishop Palmer received his theological education at Drew Theological Seminary and served pastorates in New Jersey from 1933 until appointed to First Methodist Church in Glendale, Calif., in 1951. He served there until elected to the episcopacy by the Western Jurisdictional Conference in 1960.

After eight years in the Seattle (Wash.) Area, Bishop Palmer was assigned to the Portland Area in 1968. At the time of his death, the bishop was chairman of the Board of Education's Department of Ministerial Education, vice-chairman of the Commission on Ecumenical Affairs and the Commission on the Structure of the United Methodist Church Outside the U.S.A., a member of the Board of Missions, and president of the board of trustees of Alaska Methodist University.

During his pastorates, he was known for his work in both evangelism and social concerns, and during his appointment in Glendale a new $1,300,000 sanctuary was erected. In 1968, Bishop Palmer received the Liberian Star of Africa: Grand Band, the highest decoration given to a non-Liberian.
until elected to the episcopacy by the Western Jurisdictional Conference in 1960.

After eight years in the Seattle (Wash.) Area, Bishop Palmer was assigned to the Portland Area in 1968.

At the time of his death, the bishop was chairman of the Board of Education’s Department of Ministerial Education, vice-chairman of the Commission on Ecumenical Affairs and the Commission on the Structure of the United Methodist Church Outside the U.S.A., a member of the Board of Missions, and president of the board of trustees of Alaska Methodist University.

During his pastorates, he was known for his work in both evangelistism and social concerns, and during his appointment in Glendale a new $1,300,000 sanctuary was erected. In 1968, Bishop Palmer received the Liberian Star of Africa: Grand Band, the highest decoration given to a non-Liberian.

Survivors include his wife and three daughters—Mrs. Clifford C. Cate, La Canado, Calif., Mrs. A. Ross Cash,
Long Beach, Calif., and Mrs. John A.
McKee, Honolulu, Hawaii.

A private family service was held January 8 in Hollywood Hills, Calif., and a memorial service was conducted on January 10 in Glendale First Church. A memorial service in the Portland Area will be held in about ten days.

Bishop Palmer’s predecessor in Portland, Bishop A. Raymond Grant, died in office in 1957. Earlier, Bishop Bruce R. Baxter died in 1947 while presiding over the annual conference session.

PAGE NINE
Evangelists

Miss Linde Gaines, center, a st. from page one from page one

Evangelists

ing.” Dr. Outler told the Congress that “without some type of evangelical revival the future of the church and of the world is bleak indeed.” Indicating how the first and second “great awakenings” in the American continent saved the people from dangers of their times, the Congress was challenged to see that, even though these are different times, there is no less need for an awakening. He said, “If there is to be a new awakening, it must be ecumenical, social-action oriented, and be an outpouring of the Holy Spirit.”

In his keynote address to the Congress, Dr. Joseph H. Yeskel, general secretary of the United Methodist Board of Evangelism, indicated a number of current issues which indicate that the Church is recovering a new sense of evangelistic concern. Some of these are: a major concern of all the agencies engaged in planning which “expresses a universal agreement that the number one priority is for a new understanding of and participation in what it means to be committed to Jesus Christ as Savior and Lord; the interest shown in the attendance at the Congress; the refreshing challenges of the lay ministry movement; the dis-coversies that the ecological crisis is to be solved only in the human dimension; and the enthusiasm which has been generated for “Key ’73,” interdenominational program which promises to involve churches of widely-differing backgrounds in a united favor for Christian witness.”

Holy Spirit.”

In his keynote address to the Congress, Dr. Joseph H. Yeakel, general secretary of the United Methodist Board of Evangelism, indicated a number of currents which indicate that the Church is recovering a new sense of evangelistic concern. Some of these are: a major concern of all the agencies engaged in planning which "expresses a universal agreement that the number one priority is for a new understanding of and participation in what it means to be committed to Jesus Christ as Savior and Lord; the interest shown in the attendance at the Congress; the refreshing challenges of the lay ministry movement; the discoveries that the ecological crisis is to be solved only in the human dimension; and the enthusiasm which has been generated for "Key '73," interdenominational program which promises to involve churches of widely differing backgrounds in a united front for Christian witness."

Calls from two sides of the world for the Christian community to be obedient to and involved in issues now, rather than apathetic and future-oriented only, featured the session on Tuesday morning when Dr. Samuel Kamalese, a minister from Madras, India, said that “Good intentions are not enough, and it is impossible to be a Christian in isolation. Christians are called into visible community in order to carry out God's will in the world.”

Sharing the platform with Dr. Kamalese was John H. Staggers, Jr., former sociology professor and community organizer in Washington, who said he is not worried about extreme elements in American life, but by the "marginal man— the bulk of the popu-
Bishop Everett Walter Palmer

A Tribute

The death of Bishop Everett W. Palmer comes to most of his friends as a tremendous shock for he was a man who constantly expressed the vigor of life in words and deeds. His amazing vitality and endurance were so continuous and visible.

He was an incurable optimist. I can never forget the enthusiasm with which he, as chairman of the Board of Trustees, dramatized the financial needs of Alaska University. This was at the November meeting of the Council of Bishops in Portland, where he served as host. What appeared to many as a difficult undertaking was to him a challenging opportunity. Because the need was so great and the cause so worthy, he was convinced that the achievement of the goal was sure.

His disposition toward this particular cause depicted so clearly his life style and his complete commitment to the faith. From a gold miner in his native Wisconsin to the untimely end of his career as a bishop, he never faltered in the face of difficulties. What some men would have considered insurmountable barriers, to him were open doors.

A graduate of Dakota Wesleyan College and Drew School of Theology, he served as a pastor in the Southern New Jersey Conference for eighteen years. During those years, he and Mrs. Palmer made many friends, and his leadership was significantly felt in the life of the Conference. In 1951 he left the pastorate at Asbury Park to accept an appointment to First United Methodist Church in Glendale, California, and served there nine years. Under his leadership a $1,300,000 church was erected. While in a conference and jurisdiction where he was relatively new, he won the confidence of the Western Jurisdiction and in 1960 was elected to the episcopacy. For eight years he served the Seattle Area and in 1968 was assigned to the Portland Area where he remained until his death.

He was a man of deep convictions and had the courage to support them. I never knew him to yield a conviction until he was thoroughly convinced that a different point or procedure was better.

At the time of his death, he was chairman of the General Board of Education’s Department of Ministerial Education and vice president of both the General Commission on Ecumenical Affairs and the Commission on the Structure of Methodism Outside the U.S.A.

I like to think of Bishop Palmer as a man on the move with wide concern. A member of the General Board of Missions, he was ardently supportive of the outreach of the Church around the world. President Tubman of Liberia was so impressed by his enthusiasm for the missionary enterprise that he decorated him with the order of the Star of Africa during his visit there in 1968.

Bishop Palmer was a gifted preacher, a man with evangelistic zeal and deep social concern. His death was in keeping with his style of life. He was not waiting for it to come. He was on the move. And I like to believe that he still is.

PRINCE A. TAYLOR, JR.
R. C. Seminarian
Asks For End
To 'Tensions'

SXI — Fourth Church, Millville, recently enjoyed a visit by Father James Francis Betz, to its UMYP. Father Betz is now a deacon and presently serving an internship at St. Mary's parish before his ordination in May of 1971. He is a native of Philadelphia and a student at St. Mary's Seminary.

"The new Roman Catholic," said Father Betz, "has to be seen primarily as an individual whose sole responsibility is to his own conscience." He went on to say that one of the obvious trends within his Church today is found in an emphasis on the personal relationship of the Catholic to God and the Scriptures. "When scholarship began its study of the Bible, their findings had a great effect upon the attitudes of our Church leaders and laity." According to Father Betz, this emphasis has always existed in the Church, but has been stifled and retarded by an over-emphasis on tradition. "We have been standing still for over three hundred years — a frozen Church afraid to move, but the Spirit has changed all that!"

When asked to comment on the question of church unity, Father Betz said, "No longer can the Roman Catholic Church say that the Protestant is wrong." Yes, the emphasis should be on finding our common goals and learning from one another. He feels very definitely that Protestantism is moving in the very same direction from which Catholics have come. He sees no possibility in the future of a structural unity among the two Churches, but he feels the pressing necessity of spiritual union among believers.

In his closing remarks Father Betz re-emphasized the need for an end to the denominational tensions which exist between Catholics and Protestants. Said Father Betz, "What is needed is a genuine return to an emphasis on the Spirit and His power to transform."

Bergen Squ
Aid Camde

SXI — After a mini Square Church of Camde Aid Camde was formed by a number of members of the congregation who had been meeting in the basement for the past seven years and raised some money from the sale of items. The group has been raising funds to help the poor and needy in the community.