CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE
To plead for the farm family on the need of life in farm organization that has served its day. Filling the soil is not a matter of occupation unrelated to American efficiency. We desperately need the family-type farm, with all of its advantages that can work to increase the fertility of the soil, improve farming methods, lengthen the hours of leisure for the farm family and help them discover better methods for using their hours—so that more and more open spaces of the nonfarm rural areas where rural could unite forces on such a project as churching the power of constructive action as it has a natural momentum that no legislation can inhibit. The man who is close to the realization that man has not yet really demonstrated the power of constructive cooperation.

Bishop and Mrs. Hartman have two sons, Mason Nutter and Richard Otis,

L. O. Hartman's interest in the Christian World Mission goes back to his student days — Ohio Wesleyan, the class of 1899, Boston University School of Theology in the class of 1902. From 1914 to 1920, he was superintendent of the Foreign Department of the Board of Sunday Schools of the Methodist Episcopal Church, during which time he made a tour of the foreign mission fields. He became a member of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1924 and of its Executive Committee and its Committee on Candidates. In 1933 the latter committee became the Personnel Committee and he was made its chairman and presided from 1936 to unification. In the present Board of Missions and Church Extension of the Methodist Church, he has been chairman of the Personnel Committee from the beginning. On this occasion, therefore, we are recognizing a life time of devotion to the missionary work of the Church. Summarizing these years of service, we find three major interests: religious education in the foreign field; the missionary education of the church at home; and the recruiting, selecting and training of missionaries. It is in the latter connection that we do him honor today.

When the futures of young lives are at stake and the success and standing of the Christian movement are vitally concerned, a good presiding officer is necessary and Bishop Hartman has been an able wielder of the gavel. He has always exercised good judgment in guiding debate and discussion, being patient in bringing out the various points of view and yet firm in his decisions. A marked characteristic has been his insistence that all candidates have fair and adequate consideration, a most important element in a personnel committee chairmanship.
Bishop Hartman has been particularly helpful in his awareness of the magnitude and variety of the missionary task at home and abroad, of the changing status of missionaries and the need for their services. We have been particularly fortunate in his progressive and liberal outlook on religion and in the kind of Christianity which is worth exporting, together with his broad interpretation of the meaning of evangelism. It is rather extraordinary that during his chairmanship the Board has had no theological dissension in its Personnel Committee and has been able to send to the fields representatives of all sections and all points of view found in our Methodist churches and educational institutions. On one platform only has he insisted in this regard. He unceasingly has cautioned against the acceptance of uncompromising militants of any and all points of view! Bishop Hartman has always upheld for all candidates the highest standards of excellence in Christian character, educational preparation and professional training. That all missionaries should have sympathetic attitudes toward the people of other lands and their religions and mores has been with him a major emphasis.

We have come together, therefore, to pay our respects to our retiring chairman, to honor him and to thank him for these years of devoted service in which we speak for the Board, its secretaries and also for hundreds of Methodist missionaries throughout the world.
